MORE HOPE.

There comes from Washington a gleam of hope that the President will recover. His symptoms have continued to grow more favorable since Saturday, and should these continue for three or four days longer there will be strong grounds on which to hope for his final recovery. It must be borne in mind, however, that President Garfield is in an extremely critical condition. But the stomach retains food much better than it did last week, and his mind is stronger and his physical strength on the increase. These conditions have given Washington a cheerful look, and the flag of hope has been raised. The surgeons in attendance at the White House are more confident than at any time during the past week, and Dr. Hamilton is credited with saying that he believes the President will recover. The hope of the Nation is that the worst has come, and that Garfield will be saved to the country.

Arrangements have been made in Chicago to toll the fire bells immediately on the announcement of the President's death. They will strike 49 times each, the number of years in his age.

James Tobin, of Chicago, who murdered his daughter a year ago last May, has been sentenced to the penitentiary for life. The murder was one of the most cold-blooded, unprovoked, and brutal that ever was committed in Chicago, and although he confessed to the killing, and there was no dispute as to the manner in which he killed her, his neck was saved.

Mrs. Garfield's fund up to last Friday, was $156,757, and all except $5,000 was paid in. Should the President die, the fund will be $250,000 in a few days, and then will come the opportunity for J. W. Mackey to show his practical sympathy for Mrs. Garfield. He promised that in case of the President's death, no man in the United States would be ahead of him in generosity.

Recently a colored postmaster in South Carolina wanted to be relieved from distributing mails on Sunday, as his religious scruples revolted at such work. He sent a long letter to the post-office department asking that the post-office be closed on that day. The department replied by saying that the only way the work could be avoided on his part was to resign the office. It did not take long for the postmaster to settle the matter with his conscience. When it came to the question as to which should take a back seat, his conscience or his office, he decided to hold fast to the office.

The dairymen who met in Milwaukee to form a protective association, elected the following officers: President, Hon. Hiram Smith, Sheboygan Falls; Vice Presidents, Chester Haden, Ladoga, Wis. and W. H. Morrison, Elkhorn; Secretary C. P. Crossfield, Fort Atkinson; Treasurer, W. H. Hinkle, Elgin, Ill. As was stated in the Gazette several days ago the association is for the purpose of resisting the demand of Hubbard & Co., of New York, who are the patentees of cheese hoops and bandages and fillers. This firm ask an exorbitant royalty for the use of these articles, and certain dairymen are refusing to pay it. Suits will be brought against them by Hubbard & Co., and to meet these suits the dairymen are combining their strength.

Max Strakosch, the well known operative manager, does not think that Adeline Patti will come to this country, notwithstanding the preliminary announcements. Mr. Strakosch is her brother-in-law, and knows something of her feeling in regard to visiting America. She can make $3,000 a night in Europe without trouble or any risk of management. There is no manager in this country who can afford to pay Patti $5,000 a night, and at the same time pay the rest of the troupe and other expenses, which would amount to $6,000 or $7,000 a night. If Patti does not come Adeline will, but she will not come if Patti does. These two ladies are impressed with the idea that the United States can not hold two stars of the first magnitude at the same time.

The cabinet discussed the question on Saturday of calling General Arthur to Washington, and after the meeting Postmaster General James started for New York to confer with the Vice President. This step would indicate that the cabinet have but little faith in the recovery of the President. While holding the meeting the message of Lincoln's cabinet to Andrew Johnson was read, which is as follows: "By the death of President Lincoln the office of President has devolved under the Constitution upon you. The emergency of Government demands that you should immediately qualify according to the requirement of the Constitution, and enter upon the duties of President of the United States. If you will please make known your pleasure, such arrangements as you may deem proper will be made."

Some time ago the editor of the Gazette wrote Gans' Sons, of New York, asking why the price of Wisconsin tobacco was not given in the weekly reports sent out by that firm and published in the Gazette and other papers. The answer does not meet the question. They say they report all the sales as they are made, and that they can not quote them differently. The Gans suggest in the letter to the editor, that if the growers would pay more attention to the weed in Wisconsin they would get better prices, and that the Gans firm would rather pay high prices than low prices. The tobacco market, they say, is booming, but much of the 1880 crop, is unsound and therefore does not bring good prices and sells slowly. It occurs to us that the growers in Wisconsin are paying considerable attention to the "weed" and that is a general rule the quality is worth recognizing in the weekly report of J. S. Gans' Sons.

TRAUMATIC SURGERY.

Have the Doctors Been Competent?
From the Philadelphia American.

The general opinion of the country and of the medical profession is that the President's case has been treated as skillfully as the present condition of traumatic surgery in this country permits. The doctors in charge have not shown omniscience nor the power to tell all that is to happen to-morrow. But they have ample skill and experience, and they have done as well as could any other set of American surgeons in their place. And it is ascertained by the best foreign authorities that in this branch America now leads the world. Professor Virehow, of Berlin, points to the scientific results of the studies carried on during the recent war, as making great advances in this matter, and as constituting a landmark in the history of European science in countries which enjoyed equal advantages. Dr. Hammond, of New York, the principal critic of the physicians in attendance on the President, unfortunately retired from the hospital service at too early a stage to profit as fully by these advances as Dr. Bliss, of Hamden, Conn., Bayburn, and their associates have done. For ten years he has been something of a specialist in lines which diverge widely from traumatic surgery. Hence the looseness and inaccuracy of his diagnosis of the President's case. On Monday week he was positive that the President was dying of pyemia, and had but two or three days to live. Dr. Hammond is a man whose name has been kept before the public, and some are disposed to buy great stress upon his opinions. This unfortunate prediction should help them to see that his dicta are not entitled to the weight which is claimed for them.

Bradford, Pa.

Thomas Fitch, Bradford, Pa., writes: "I enclose money for Spring Blossom, as I said I would if it cured me. My dyspepsia vanished, with all its symptoms. Many thanks; I shall never be without it in the house." Price 50 cents, trial bottle 10 cents.

"Old Folks at home" was written by Stephen C. Foster thirty years ago, who sold it to Christy, of minstrel fame, for $5, and received a bonus of $5 more for the privilege of having his (Christy's) name on the title-page as author, and after that piece had made him rich he generously gave Foster $50 more, which was all he ever received for the song. But it served to make the author famous and to sell all his other songs, yet he died a poor man. For a while the piece waned in public favor, until it was sung by Mlle. Nilsson at her concerts, when it took a new start, and at this present time it is one of the best selling songs, in the market. The numerous transactions from its melody by upwards of twenty different composers serve to keep it popular. It is really a worthy companion piece to "Sweet Home," and will probably be sung for a hundred years or more.

The day after the wedding; Trophæus finds his blushing bride engaged in placing her wreath of artificial flowers under a glass globe. "What is that for?" "—Why, my dear, what is that for?" "B.—To keep it clean, of course." "T.—But what—why—?" "B.—Who knows, my dear? I might want to use it again."

Nearly a Miracle.

E. Asenith Hall, Birmingham, N. Y., writes: "I suffered for several months with a dull pain through left lung and shoulders. I lost my spirits, appetite and color, and could with difficulty keep up all day. My mother procured some BUCKEY'S BLOOD PURIFIER, took them as directed, and have felt no pain since first week after using them, and am now quite well." Price $1.00, trial size 50 cents.

UNDER THE WHEELS.

UNOFFICIAL BULLETIN.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 29, 7 a. m.—Information just received from the physicians' room is to the effect that the President held his own during the night, and that favorable symptoms previously noted still continue. His fever subsided about midnight. He passed a good night, resting and sleeping well.

OFFICIAL BULLETIN.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Aug. 29—12:30 p. m.—At the morning dressing of the President an additional point of suppuration was recognized in his swollen face, which being incised gave exit to some healthy looking pus. The other openings on the exterior of the swelling are likewise discharging, but though less tense the tunic fact has not materially diminished in size. Nothing now has been observed in the condition of the wound. The usual daily rise in temperature has not yet occurred, and the general condition has not materially changed since morning. Pulse 106; temperature 98.5; respiration 18.

UNOFFICIAL.

WASHINGTON, 3 a. m.—The President has been the past hour; everything seems favorable.

3 a. m.—Symptoms favorable as yesterday morning, and he takes and retains nourishment. His mind is perfectly clear; pulse 100, temperature 98.5, respiration 17.

3 a. m.—This morning's dressing showed a most favorable improvement, and slept better than any time during the past week. Mrs. Garfield and the attendants also rested well. Dr. Bliss made a slight incision in the gland, resulting in a liberal discharge; there are now four openings and the swelling is much diminished.

THE PRESIDENT'S HOME.

Special to the Gazette.

CLEVELAND, Aug. 29.—There is great satisfaction and hope in the family circles at Mentor and Hiram for the recovery of the President.

A HAPPY SUNDAY.

The People Elated Over the Improved Condition of President Garfield.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—This has been the happiest Sunday for the people of Washington since the President was shot. It has not been the most hopeful, but after three days of great depression and painful anxiety a reaction came which conquered reason and good judgment, leaving the people elated and happy, and in this mood they went to bed to-night, some of them it must be said fairly hopeful that the President would live to complete the great work he has begun. But the more considerate ones did not need to be told that the distinguished sufferer was still at the point of death, and that the present favorable turn in his symptoms meant only that he had ceased to advance toward the grave—a thing that was necessary for him to do, or he would not have lived through the day. But the cold reasoning of the physicians was not able to repress the light hearts of those who were slow to give up hope and quick to return to it again when the gloomy forebodings of the surgeons were not verified.

The morning bulletin to-day was probably the most encouraging that the physicians have ever issued at the White House, coming as it did after three days of fearful suspense. It said that the President passed most comfortable night since Wednesday; that his mind was perfectly clear, and, one of the attending physicians added, quite hopefully, that his pulse and respiration showed great improvement over the preceding day.

The good tidings sent by Private Secretary Brown to the cabinet brought most of them to the Executive Mansion within the hour, and before the writing of the morning bulletin carriages rolled up the smooth driveway to the portico, doors opened and slammed, and the cabinet members greeted each other with a cheery "good morning." It was a beautiful day, and the mounted orderly who galloped away from the White House with the bulletin pressed his way through an eager crowd of expectant watchers at the outside gate. Up to that time no news had been brought from the sick-room, and to these people the mounted orderly who galloped away without speaking, represented an equal chance for life or death.

THE CABINET.

Watching the Present—All Seem to Think the President Improving.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—The cabinet paid the usual visit to the Executive Mansion this evening. At 10 o'clock, rather earlier than on any night for some time, they took their departure.

The correspondent of the Inter Ocean asked Attorney General MacVeagh what they thought of the President's condition to-night. He said that there was a little improvement, but they could not tell yet how much to build their hopes upon it. They would know better in a day or two.

Secretary Kirkwood said they were really much encouraged to-night. The doctors had assured them that the President was a great deal better.

There was a healthful condition of the stomach, and an improvement in the tone of the pulse, still, we must not get our hopes too high.

Postmaster General James was as hopeful as ever, seeming to have forgotten that he had suffered despondency to get the better of his confidence for a day or two.

Secretary Windom was there with Mrs. Windom and their daughter. As they were leaving the Secretary was asked how he gloomed of the situation to-night. He said: "Well, this may be the turning point, but we must remember that the President is very weak and low and not to be too hopeful. It may be that this is the beginning of recovery, but it is too soon to tell yet."

The other cabinet officers expressed themselves in a similar vein. They were disposed to watch and wait, and not to be surprised at whichever turn the case might take.

DR. BLISS.

He Feels More Hopeful of the President's Recovery.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 28.—Dr. Bliss returned about 7:45 p. m. from a drive with his family, and courteously stopped to be interviewed.

"What is the good word to-day, Doctor?"

"You have it all in the bulletins. There has been a little improvement."

"Has the President taken more solid food?"

"No. We do not think it necessary. We gave it to him yesterday because he asked for it, but he gets enough nourishment from the liquid food."

"What liquid is he taking now?"

"We are giving him peptonized milk and extract of beef warmed to a temperature of 100 degrees."

"Does he continue to relish it?"

"Yes, he enjoys it. He does not want for solid food."

"Is he in good spirits to-day?"

"He is not despondent."

"Is he able to talk?"

"Oh yes, he has been talking more or less all day."

"Can he hold a continuous conversation?"

"Oh yes, he has done so to-day."

"Could you recall anything that he has said that would be of interest to the public?"

"I suppose I could if I had time, but of course, I do not pay much attention to such things."

"Is he taking stimulants?"

"I have given him his alcohol bath. I do this myself, because I know exactly what I want, and I think that is the best of a man very tired. I got no sleep last night and only half an hour to-day."

"Do you expect a serious time to-night?"

"No; there is no indication of it at present."

Secretary Kirkwood arrived soon after and said:

"The indications to-day are more favorable. We hope he has turned the corner."

WHITEWATER, Aug. 27.—The Republicans held a caucus here to-night attended by over 500. The house was divided on the question whether J. J. Partridge or Pitt Cravath be chairman. The tellers disagreed, and two separate organizations acted. Although the Cravath side were supported by a large number of Democrats, still they were beaten, and the opposite party elected all its candidates.

CHICAGO GOSSIP.

Special Correspondence of the Gazette.

CHICAGO, Aug. 27.—Our beautiful Lincoln park has the best and most costly conservatory in the western country. Among the very large number are 150 varieties of tropical plants and flowers, kept in an even temperature of 86 degrees, by steam heat. The plants are of all colors and sizes, from the smallest hanging vine to the tall banana tree, decorated with blossoms and bunches of green fruit. Everything is watered regularly and at stated intervals. The view is simply superb, and taken in connection with the extra fine display outside, is a lasting credit to our park commissioners and managers.

How to Can Fruits and Vegetables.
All fruit and vegetables do not require the same degree of heat, or the same continued application of heat.
Fruits of delicate texture, such as the strawberry, raspberry, blackberry, gooseberry and currant, should not be brought quite to the boiling point; while apples, pears, quince and peach may be boiled, but not so rapidly as to soften or macerate them. The best way to can fruit is to have it quite ripe; then pack firmly in cans, adding water

Care of the Roadside.

The portion that lies between the fences and the ditch employed to drain the public highway is generally in bad condition in all respects. No revenue is derived from it by the public or the individual whose land adjoins it. Its appearance is often highly offensive, both to persons who live near it, and to those who pass along the road. It is in many cases the depository of stumps, stones, bushes and other sorts of trash, which are drawn from the fields and dumped down to get them out of the way. When this is the case a large portion of the space is likely to become occupied by rank weeds and bushes.
The seeds of the former ripen, and are carried by the wind on the cultivated land in the vicinity. When the ground becomes covered with the weeds and crops on the adjacent fields occupied by grass, grain, or cultivated crops.
Fires often get a start in these weeds and bushes, destroy the fences and do other damage. The untidy appearance of this strip of land gives a very bad appearance to the entire farm on which it is located. It diminishes the value of the estate if it is for sale, and American farms change owners frequently.

Many farmers decline to do anything toward improving the land beside a highway because they think that it belonged to the public absolutely, and that they would derive no benefit from their labors if they took the best care of it.
Such, however, is not the case. The public has only a qualified right to the land set apart for a road. If the highway is for any cause discontinued, the absolute ownership of the land is immediately vested in the owner of the property to which it once belonged.
Even while a portion of the tract is occupied by a road, the owner of the adjoining land has the right to improve the remainder and to have the benefit of its products, providing he does nothing to injure travel or interfere with the work of persons who have charge of the road. He is entitled to the grass or other crops that grow upon it. Local laws afford protection to shade fruit and ornamental trees planted by the side of a road, as well as to their products. Indeed, the laws of several States encourage the planting and care of these trees by affording a rebate of taxes when such trees are planted and cultivated. They also impose severe penalties on persons who injure them in any manner. In most of the Western States the lawgivers have done all that was in their power to encourage the improvement of roadsides.

As the strip of land between the farm and traveled portions of the road is so narrow, it is not economical to plow it with a view of raising cultivated crops.
In fact, it is not desirable to plow it, as the operation would cause it to wash and would prevent it from being used by travelers on foot. It is desirable to keep the larger portions of it in grass.
By keeping the surface free from stones and other impediments to the travel, and cut and cured like that growing in a field. It is generally the case in portions of the country settled for a considerable time that the land by the side of a road will be occupied with white clover. The excellent drainage afforded by the ditch at the side and the fertilizers blowing from the road-bed, both favor the growth of white clover. When this valuable plant obtains possession of the land, it can be used for pasture. Sheep and other stock can be turned onto it once a week or as often as desirable, and left in care of a competent person. The roots and creeping stalks of white clover are excellent for protecting the banks, and they will naturally extend into the sides of the ditches and prevent their washing. The judicious use of a small amount of white clover seed will insure the introduction of the plant on roadsides.

The location under consideration is very favorable in all respects for the production of trees that will furnish fruit and nuts. It is well drained, and good drainage is essential to successful tree culture. The washing from the road furnishes excellent fertilizing materials. The road itself is very convenient for transporting the trees as well as manure and mulch. The trees are where they may be seen every day and their condition noticed. It has long been noticed that the presence of fine dust, such as is constantly rising from a traveled road, is favorable to the growth of trees and the production of fruit and nuts. Trees planted by the side of a road have sufficient space in which to grow, do not injure annual crops, and their products are clear gain.
Many fruit trees and all nut-bearing trees are ornamental as well as useful.
The best fruit trees to plant by the side of a road are those that produce late varieties of apples. Early varieties of apples are liable to lead persons into temptation. The black walnut, pecan, butternut and hickory are all beautiful and stately trees. They serve the purpose of ornamentation as well as most of our hardy forest trees, while they furnish, when of considerable size, an abundance of nuts. The trees are difficult to transplant, but the nuts can be planted in the places where trees are desired.

Cottonwood, balm of Gilead, all kinds of willows and poplars, should be discarded in selecting trees to plant by the side of roads. They have nothing to commend them but their quick growth.
They throw out sprouts from the roots, while their branches are exceedingly liable to be broken off by the wind or by accumulations of snow. The common elm is objectionable on account of the many sprouts thrown out at the roots, while the trunks are generally attacked by the borers. The soft maple makes a rapid growth, and sometimes becomes a beautiful tree, but it is generally infested with borers, while the limbs frequently break off by the action of winds and sleet. During the past few years the presence of worms on young trees has made them exceedingly undesirable.
The characteristics desired in street trees are hardiness, freedom from sprouts and suckers, fine and abundant foliage, general cleanliness and strength of trunk and limb. These desirable qualities are all found united in the elm and sugar or rock maple. They are also objectionable on account of their slow growth. The different varieties of the ash are all excellent, while there are few objections to the European larch, the horse chestnut, the American linden or basswood, wild cherry and the ash-leaved maple. —Chicago Times.

according to the dryness or juicy character of the fruit. After this seal the can, leaving a vent for the escape of the gas. The place the cans in a larger vessel containing cold water and bring this to a boil. For berries boil five minutes, then stand to cool thirty minutes. For other fruits, boil from ten to twenty minutes, then stand to cool for thirty minutes. The object in allowing them to cool is to give time for the gases to escape through the vent before finally sealing. Strawberries and cherries should be kept from the light to preserve their color. The jars may be done by wrapping them in dark-colored paper and keeping them in a cool place.

For green corn, peas and beans, if canned in that way they need to be boiled five or six hours hard, then cool forty minutes. But the best way to can corn is to cut the corn from the cob when it is in nice order for roasting ears. Put it on and cook three quarters of an hour, or until it is done, put in salt enough for taste and stir it through; this helps to keep it. Then if you use glass jars, fill them full of the boiling corn, put on the tops, and I think you will have nice corn the coming winter.

To fill glass jars without breaking them, I bring a towel out of cold water, set the jar on a part of the cloth, and then wrap the rest around the jar; it is never broken one yet. This, of course, is less work, and I prefer it for corn.

If one wishes to cook fruit before putting it in cans, add what sugar will suit the taste, then boil five minutes, and while boiling fill the jar quite full and cover quickly. Glass jars are the best for this use, as the tops are so easily adjusted. —Cor. Germantown

A Valuable Trading Horse.
When the Black Hills fever was at its height McC. was one of the young men who went from St. Louis in the expectation of becoming a millionaire. After arduous labor in Dead Man's Gulch he acquired, not a fortune, but the skeleton of a horse and a mule with a wen on its leg, which had been first stolen from the Government by the Indians and afterwards recovered from the Indians by the miners. He had got them in the way of legitimate horse-trading, and was holding them to trade again.
One evening a long, lank stranger drove through the gulch with a fed horse and mule behind his wagon. The horse was a fine looking bay, and McC. wanted him.
The stranger stopped and a crowd of miners gathered around him. McC. joined them and bantoned the stranger for a trade. The stranger was willing to give his bay for the mule with a wen on its leg and $50 to boot. McC. was very uneasy for fear he would see the wen, but the stranger did not appear to notice it. Then McC. went around the big bay, felt his legs and found him sound as a new dollar. He had on a wen on its leg and $50 to boot. McC. was
